

Questions That Gather Memories

A gentle handout from Stillwith

Sit down with a sibling, a friend, a parent. Pour the coffee. Read these aloud, one at a time. Write down what comes up. The eulogy is somewhere inside the answers.

1. What is one small thing only our family knows about them?
2. What did they always say?
3. What were they doing when they seemed happiest?
4. What did they make us laugh about?
5. What did they teach us, even without trying to?
6. What was the last time we really laughed together?
7. What is the smell, sound, or place that reminds you of them most?
8. What did they do for someone else that nobody noticed?
9. What part of them do you carry forward without thinking?
10. If you could say one more thing to them, what would it be?
